Page 2 Great Depression: Virtual Gallery Walk by This is a virtual gallery walk. Ideally, you would assign the "Worksheet" one to your students and link to the gallery walk on there. The best way to link to it is to go to Share > Copy Link > at the end of the URL, change "edit" to "present" Doing it this way will show it in "presentation view" which helps make it feel more "interactive" and less like a Google Slide. Economic Conditions that led to the Crash of 1929 by In these guided notes, students will explore the economic conditions that led to the 1929 stock market crash. On the second page you'll find the teacher/key copy. I've found that hand-drawn notes are especially effective for students with ADD/ADHD and students with dyslexia, and they were fun to make! If you're interested in having hand-drawn notes made for your specific courses, email me! Great Depression Vocabulary and Homework (SS5H5) by This vocabulary handout includes the words boom, stock, stock market, unemployment, depression, and debt. There is also a homework sheet instructing students to illustrate the meaning of the word and write a sentence correctly using the word. Great Depression Narrative by This project is to be used with sets created of Great Depression photographs. I set was included for this project, but the entire lesson, including plan and all 4 sets of photographs are available for purchase. Photo sets are meant to be differentiated, as well as used with an analysis sheet, adapted from the National Archives. However, this project can be used by creating your own sets of primary photographs. After completing analysis, students will create their own story. This worksheet is intended to help students practice analyzing and interpreting political cartoons. This worksheet specifically addresses Immigration during the First Red Scare. The Texas 11th Grade STAAR test uses political cartoons throughout the test making cartoon analysis a necessary skill to successfully meet the standard on that test. At the start of the Great Depression, Herbert Hoover was president, and many people blamed him for what happened. The New Deal created around 100 new government offices and 40 new agencies. Mass failures in the banking system was another contributing factor. Explain why the economy became progressively worse as the Great Depression went on. One reason for the crash is what is called over speculation, which means that stocks had become worth much more than the actual values of the companies they represented. Over 10,000 banks that had invested in the stock market, or who had lent money to investors, went out of business. The Dust Bowl was a region in the midwestern United States that was afflicted by drought (lack of rain) during the Great Depression. It was difficult, if not impossible, to live in the Dust Bowl, so people began to leave. Prohibition was a time in U.S. history when it was illegal to make or sell any alcoholic beverages. Selling illegal alcohol became a profitable line of business for many organized crime syndicates. When World War I ended, Congress voted to give World War I veteran soldiers a bonus of $1.25 for every day they had served overseas, and one dollar for every day they had served in the U.S. The problem was that World War I ended in 1918, and the bonuses were not scheduled to be paid out until 1945. What happened to the first bill introduced in Congress to pay out the bonuses early? Roosevelt gave his first fireside chat on March 12, 1933, just a few days after taking his oath of office. The topics of subsequent fireside chats were contemporary issues. The First New Deal was the first set of government programs put into place in order to help America recover from the Great Depression. The New Deal included a program for public works which built roads, bridges, schools, hospitals, and dams all over the country, improving American infrastructure and creating jobs. Though the First New Deal had instituted new laws and regulations, they weren't enough to make things better, and the Great Depression continued. The National Labor Relations Act was passed in 1935, guaranteeing certain rights to unions and workers and establishing a federal board to arbitrate wage agreements. Because the economy was in such dire straights when Roosevelt took office in 1933, he signed many new laws and created new government agencies designed to help the stagnating economy recover. How did the New Deal change the way that Americans thought about the government?
